Dallas is partnering with Broadway Dallas on a new exhibit spotlighting the stage production of The Lion King.

showcases five original pieces — four masks and one puppet — that demonstrate Julie Taymor’s groundbreaking design work.

These theatrical pieces are on display alongside actual African pieces from the museum’s permanent collection, allowing visitors to see the influence that actual African artistic works had on the creation of the Broadway musical.

The African American Museum, Dallas is conveniently located just across the parking lot from Broadway Dallas’ main home at the Music Hall at Fair Park. Disney’s The Lion King returns to the venue this summer, June 4-July 3. The exhibit is on display daily now through July 3, with the museum staying open late during the musical’s run so that ticket holders can walk over and explore the exhibit before curtain.

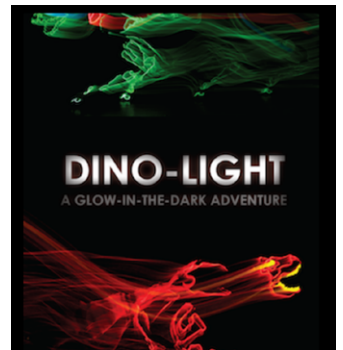

“The exhibit is an excellent example of the inseparable connectivity between the performing arts and the visual arts,” says Margie Reese, the museum’s interim executive director.
